-WHEELING, VA:-WEDNESDAY MORNING, MAY 7, 1856.

IS PENNSYLVANIA SOUND? This is a question asked by Virginius in his criticism on a speech delivered to the people of Washington, but intended for circulation in that entire Congressional district. This was evident from the manner in which the speech was prepared for circulation, and from the aspirations and designs of the author. It was evidently not the production of an exalted intellect and integrity, looking to the welfare of the nation and enlightening public intelligence, and directing popular sentiment into safe and conservative channels. It was the design and effort of a man of a different order and of far more personal views, to evade in part and ultimately follow the current of opinions, which he was in some degree unwilling to approve, but afraid to denounce or rebuke. He is to be a candidate-he will not-

Virginius had two objects in view: First, to defend the rights of the South, second, to ascertain whether those friends of Mr. Buchanan, in Pennsylvania, who have so zealously pressed him forward at this juncture as the candidate most worthy of Southern support-most deeply imbued with the conservative doctrines of the Constitutional Democracy, and who would bring around him, in the day of danger and the hour of trial, a firm, united and harmonious party, were sincere and faithful friends or not of those principles, which it is decidedly and solemnly believed can now, alone save the Union. Hence the question, the pregnant, it may be the vital question, "Is Pennsylvania Sound?"

he dare not encounter the very prejudices, passions and false philanthropies which he has inflamed by his public course.

Had Virginius been desirous of entrapping 'those friends' into a fatal avowal, he could not have been more successful; nor could they have more wantonly avowed the inconsistency and insincerity of their conduct than by the reply, under editorial sanction, in the Commonwealth, an organ of the Freesoilers of that portion

Virginius maintained the doctrine that the right of all property was prescriptive; that the soundest jurists of all countries based all rights of property upon this principle, that this was the fundamental element of the right, and that all property, recognized by constitution, law or international comity, was based and could only be based thereon. He did not quote Sir William Scott, the greatest admiralty jurist of modern times, in that nation most opposed to American Slavery, to subserve her own policy for our overthrow. He did not produce the decisions of the Supreme Court of the United States, nor all the treaties of the world touching the subject, which virtually and practically admit the prescriptice rights, whatever change may have come over the views of several of those nations as to the humanity and policy of

But there is a vast difference between the African slave trade and Southern Slavery. No nation of the world has been bold enough or so foolishly infatuated, as to propose to divest the rights of others already fixed and vested or subsisting on prescription. The utmost limit of any proposition yet made has been for each nation that became a party of these treaties, to make their own people subject to their penalties, leaving the citizens of other nations to the undisturbed pursuit of their traffic, as to the humanity and morality of which, it is not now necessary to express my opinion. No nation has dared to disavow all history and interfere with the rights of citizens of other nations, in obtaining this kind of property, and in holding it on the high seas. On the contrary, in aling it on the high seas. On the contrary, in alof admiralty, and in the various courts of the United States, having admiralty jurisdiction, the right of commerce and the right of property created by that commerce, have been recognized, allowed and enforced. Whence or how these rights, except in virtue of that prescription, on which all property subsists.

But, the argument of Virginius has not been met. The title by prescription, is irrefutable when applied to property. And Mr. Buchanan's friend, this friend who would save the South and the Union by electing Mr. Buchanau President, can only meet the issue by the bold asser tion that there can be no property in slaves, to sustain him he refers to Grotius, Puffendorf and Wesley; casting upon the South, in the morbid enthusiasm of the latter, that there slavery is "the sum of all human villainies." If there can be no property in slaves, then there can be no local law or constitution, giving a right of property in them. If there can be no property in the service of a slave, then the Constitution of the Union and the laws for the decision. citation of the Union and the laws for the delivery of fugitives from service, is without any element on which to subsist; and this Penngylvania doctrine is abolitionism-black repubnism scarcely disguised.

The whole argument in reply by the Pennsylvania Editor is contained in the following morceau. After arguing that there may be property in the slave, he illustrates, by example instead of enforcing his views by reason and Est us follow out the argument. He may take his horse "Let us follow out the argument. He may take his horse to Kassas because he is property and as Virginia calls horse tolave property too, he also may be taken alone. When in Kassas he may sell of if he chooses kill and eat his horse, because he is Ads. May be also kill and eat his herre—of hill him without eating him? If he be his property in the same sense as his horse, why may he not kill him if he thinks proper, and, like the old Romans, feed the fish with his dead hody. Add the master may easape all punishment; for the laws of the Slave States making the killing of slaves murder are of no effect in Kansas, more than would be the laws of Massachusetts or Pennsylvania, which ignores slavery altosether.

Together.

Virginius himself would not dare to place the slave and the horse in precisely the same category as to property.

Here is a confusion of languages and of ideas.

The writer confounds a qualification of property. ty with the right of property. A master in Pennsylvania has a right to the services of his adpaentice until he shall arrive at the age of t.venty-one; has he the right to kill him and cat him; or improperly use him. The English task-master had a right to work an infant sixteen hours a day and produce curvatures of the spine and malformation of the thighs, but positive law interfered and thwarted the improper use of his power; the owner of the horse in Va., had the right to beat and cruelly use his own horse, yet now, for so doing he would be indicted and punished for "cruel;" to animals." In the whole argument he confounds the qualification with the right of property and, conscious of the weakness of the argument, ends in the refuge of Theodore Parker and Abby Kelly, subjects of property, forgetting the order of Providence, which has so arranged the com-Providence, which has so arranged the complex relations of life, as that throughout the whole current of man's history, slavery has existed, and nations have only been overthrown and degraded when their slaves have been admitted to the rights of citizenchip.

Another point. Because the buccaniers of Algeria seized our commerce and enslaved our citizens, did it make them slaves or give them a citizens, did it make them slaves or give them a right of property in them? This is Mr. Joshua Giddings stensotyped argument on the floor of Congress, and is in date of years older than Mr. Montgomery. The reply for the present, is, every jurist of every civilized nation in its courts of indicature have admitted, and as has been said "suforced" the rights of property in savage and non naturalized tribes who have been have protected their own people and guarran-ted their rights of property, even when those their rights of property, even when those their of property are the savage and wild Anti-em on his way from the Gold Coast to the civil-tated between at always.

But, because the negro can pray, therefore he is not and cannot be the subject of property; still confounding qualification of property with right of property. The free State master has a qualified property in the person and service of his bond apprentice; he can control his person, direct his labor and punish his defaults, and yet the apprentice can pray, if his master has taught him so to do—a duty not very piously enforced by law or usage in some of those States. But these morbid and moribund enthusiasts will reply; that the villeinage of the apprenticeship is necessary Sellers & Pennock, 31,000 31,000 the villeinage of the apprenticeship is necessary Sellers & Pennock, for the education of youth and the moral training of society. So, precisely, is the law and the M. F. Clark, condition of modern slavery. Here is its high Mr. Fairbanks and others, and holy indication. Whatever may be the in-Bagley, Woodward & Co, dividual notions and practices of the owners. Wickersham & Walker, there is in the hands of Providence and in the Turner & Fisher, general workings of Southern society, a mighty Estate of Mrs. R. Howell, civilizing influence at work on this race of men, and in His own good time, and the blossom of the fruit is apparent in their moral condition, Pennypacker & Flyna, will He bring forth the harvest. To Him a Samuel Croft, will He bring forth the harvest. 10 Him a Samuel Croft, thousand years are as one day and He who has George Bruder, been three thousand years in educating, through Mrs. Adeia Cooke, slavery, revolution and blood, the white man for Acheson Romanel & Fry, our condition of society and form of govern-Mrs. Crifly, ment, will so dispose of this race as to justify Peinor & Nixon, the ways of God to man." God has permitted James Mooney, the ways of God to man." the ways of God to man.

But the argument need not be protracted.— Mrs. A. M. Hollingsworth,
